

Radar: Vanessa Simmons

Rap.

Simmons took a break from rehearsal to chat with Sixshot about channeling her inner rap diva, receiving advice from her legendary father, her willingness to do nude and sex scenes, getting inspiration from Kimora Lee Simmons, the responsibility of being a role model, she reveals whether or not she

Tease is someone completely different from who I am. That makes it all the much better playing this role. I am very excited about it. The director, producer, writer, and actor, J Kyle Manzay, helped bring a lot of things out that I knew were in me but maybe was a little scared to go in head first and do. He helped bring that out.

The play looks at issues when actors and rappers cross over into each other

I do write songs, poems, and all of that. If you want to see me perform I suggest that you come see the play.

How did your first acting experience of working on the soap opera, Guiding Light prepare you for this role?

Being on a soap opera has definitely prepared me for being in this play. The fast paced movement of a soap opera and a play is quick with changes and cuts

House has posed any challenges to being taken seriously as an actress?

I think that people create their own holes and create their own challenges. It is a bit difficult that people see me playing myself on TV, and then here I am as an actress. But as long as I dive in headfirst and acquire the skills that I know I have; I don

I believe that you do your best and forget the rest. I always concentrate on doing what I know is the right thing to do. All human beings make mistakes and are held accountable for them, but you just do what you do. I do what I think is right and any mistakes that I do make I learn from them, and then expand myself. I grow spiritually, physically, emotionally

Many of our readers want to know whether or not you are currently dating anyone.

There is definitely someone especial in my life. With my career I am very focused on doing everything that I can do to ensure a better future for myself.
